ArchivIQ

Your handwriting, finally searchable.

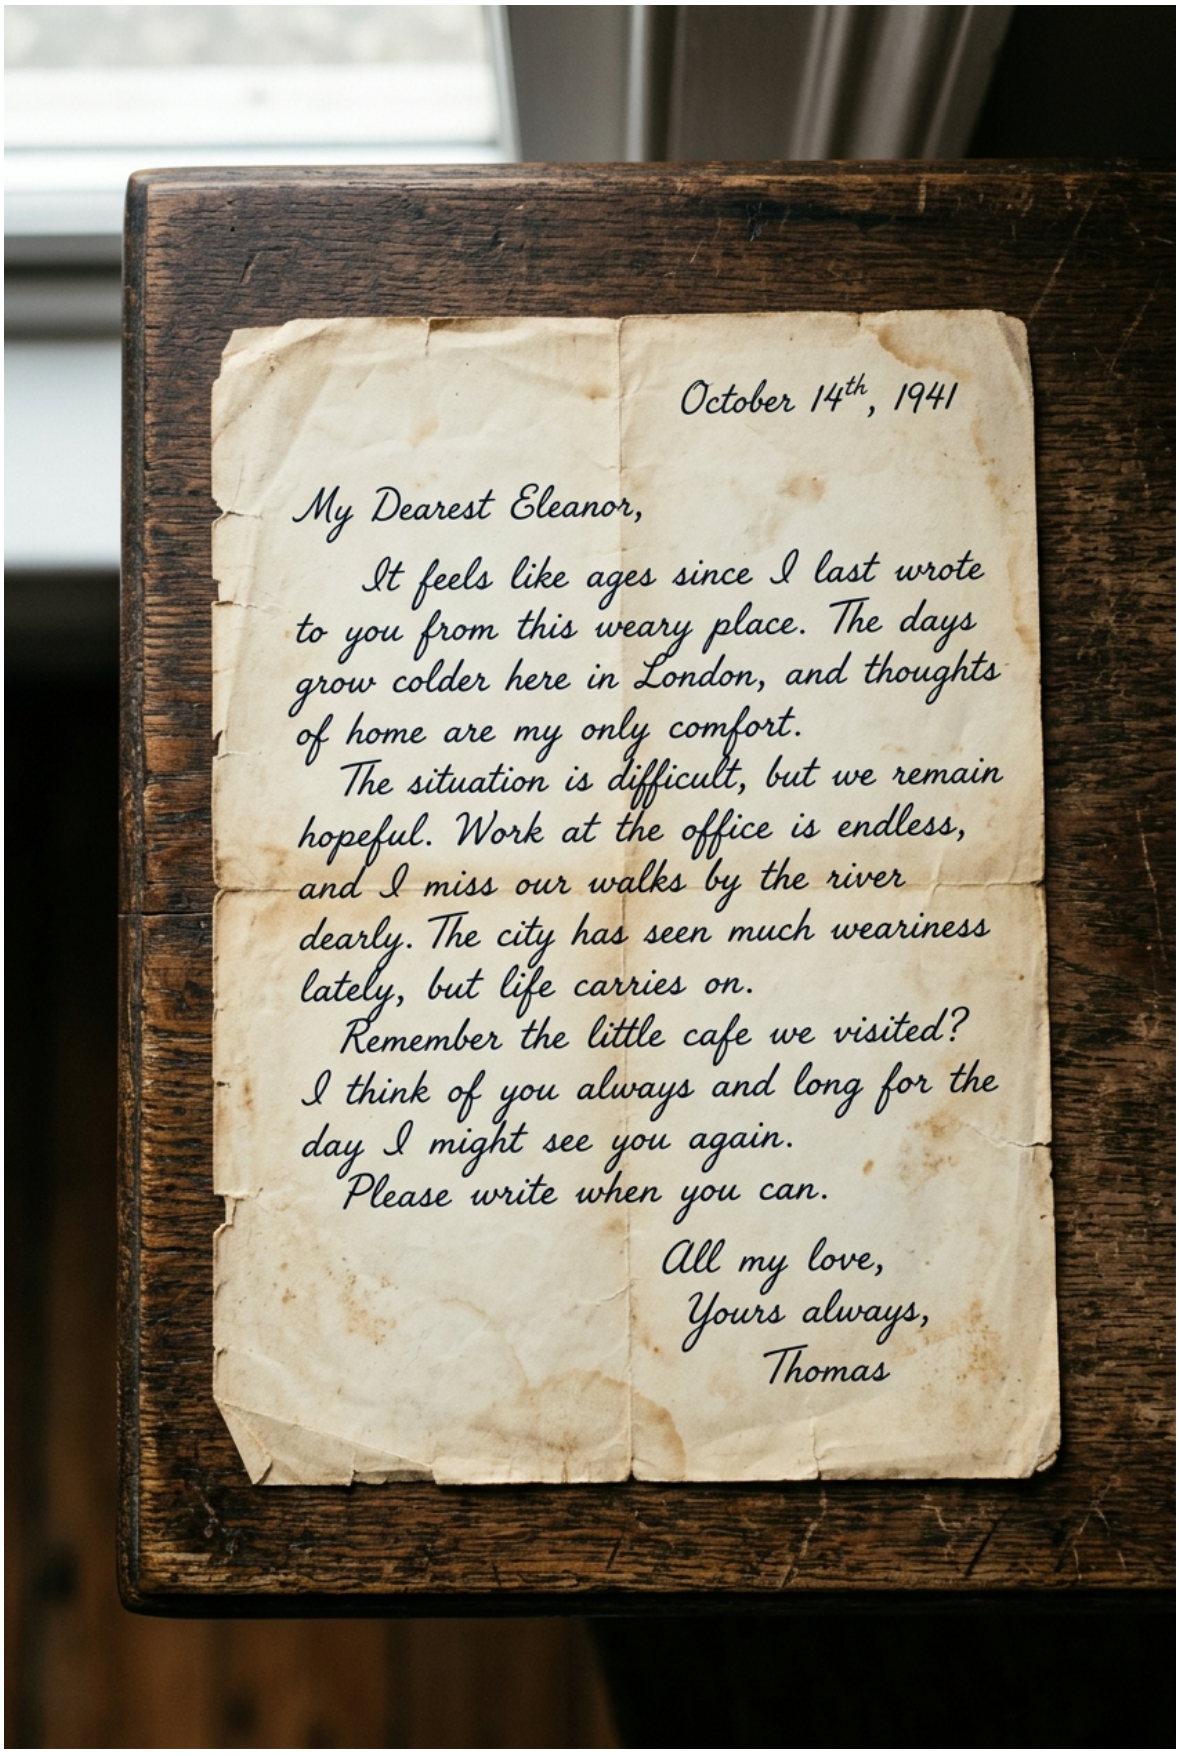

This is a working sample, not a mock-up.

Page 2 is an untouched photograph of a handwritten page. It carries an invisible text layer produced by AI transcription, so you can press Ctrl-F (Cmd-F) on page 2 and search the handwriting itself. Page 3 is the full extracted text.

Every page we digitise is delivered this way: the original image preserved exactly, with searchable text underneath.

SAMPLE DOCUMENT

Letter from Thomas to Eleanor, October 1941

October 14th, 1941
My Dearest Eleanor,
It feels like ages since I last wrote to you from this weary place. The days grow colder here in London, and thoughts of home are my only comfort.
The situation is difficult, but we remain hopeful. Work at the office is endless, and I miss our walks by the river dearly. The city has seen much weariness lately, but life carries on.
Remember the little cafe we visited? I think of you always and long for the day I might see you again.
Please write when you can.
All my love,
Yours always,
Thomas

transcription confidence 100%

Letter from Thomas to Eleanor, October 1941

October 14th, 1941

My Dearest Eleanor,

It feels like ages since I last wrote to you from this weary place. The days grow colder here in London, and thoughts of home are my only comfort.

The situation is difficult, but we remain hopeful. Work at the office is endless, and I miss our walks by the river dearly. The city has seen much weariness lately, but life carries on.

Remember the little cafe we visited? I think of you always and long for the day I might see you again.

Please write when you can.

All my love,
Yours always,
Thomas